1/35 M4 SHERMAN TANK

Good enough

There's a piercing, shrill whine reverberating. Like a thousand thunder claps repeated through a brass trumpet. It echoes around in his head. He coughs through a dry throat and winces at the smell of burnt metal. Shivering, he tries to move his lead-heavy legs off the pedals. He turns to ask the bow gunner for help. There's only half of Jimmy left in his seat. The driver greets what's left of what he ate hours ago, days? There's snow coming through the 88 hole in the glacis. The driver knows he needs to get out, this Sherman is done for. He just can't seem to move his legs. There's voices outside. Kit features 3 military figures, moveable gun, and open/closed hatches.

1/24 JAGUAR XJ-S H.E. TOM WALKINSHAW RACING

Pedal to the metal

Long, low, and powerful, the Jaguar XJS was a beauty of a car. The "High Efficiency" H.E. version took the concept and drove it just a little further. With a new engine, the car was not only more efficient, but also higher powered. One might reasonably ask why a V12 could ever possibly need to be more powerful, but the answer would always be "why not". Tom Walkinshaw and his racing team put the type through its paces and won the 1984 European Touring Car Championship. This limited edition kit features decals for the 1984 European Touring Car Championship Car No. 1.

On Safari

Tenth place doesn't seem that great until you think about how much it takes to even complete the Safari rally. Bad roads, unpredictable weather, and other radical elements of chance make every race a setpiece example of how things can go wrong really quick. Cars and drivers have to be in top condition... and a little lucky besides. 1/72 F-15 ACTIVE/INTIGRATED FLIGHT CONTROL SYSTEM

Improving on excellence

Make no mistake, the F-15 was an exceptional aircraft and still is. However, the Intelligent Flight Control System was intended to make it a superlative aircraft. This system would have taken work load off crew, increased the ability to control the craft during equipment failure, and optimize performance. "ACTIVE" also incorporated new nozzles and flight software that increased the flight envelope of the aircraft yet further. Kit features new canard and bulge resin parts and large size pitot tube metal parts.

Tomokazu's N1K2

Originally meant to carry a bulky float, the N1K found its wings when the float was dropped off the design and the aircraft could be used in a pure air superiority role. It was one of the most capable Japanese designs of the war. It helped Tomokazu Kasai chalk up ten kills despite only receiving roughly a month of flight training instead of the normal six months. This limited edition kit features decals for Tomokazu Kasai's N1K2-J.

Supplying striking power

Sea Kings enabled the British to run continuous rounds of supplies and soldiers onto the Falklands to drive off the Argentines. They also conducted essential anti-submarine operations and even acted as decoys for Exocet missiles—an incredibly risky task. Even for years after the war, HAR search and rescue variants of the helicopter kept up a presence on the island. During the 2011 Tohoku earthquake, eighteen F-2s operated by the 21st squadron were damaged or destroyed at their base in Matsushima. Immediately thereafter the training duties of the squadron were parceled out to other units. After much effort and expense, however, the 21st is back! This detailed kit celebrates the unit's reactivation and the 40th anniversary of the unit. Limited edition kit features detailed photoetched parts plus a special 40th anniversary decal.

An eye in the air

An extremely light and agile aircraft, the Fi 156 "Storch" was renowned for its short landing and takeoff abilities. It was used throughout WWII by the Germans for observation, artillery spotting, and VIP transportation. Most famously, it was the aircraft used to extract a deposed Mussolini from his mountaintop prison. Less famously, it landed the new head of the Luftwaffe in Berlin during the middle of the Battle of Berlin—possibly the only aircraft he still had command over. Kit features new antenna and wheel hub plus three sets of decals.

1/48 NAKAJIMA B6N2 CARRIER ATTACK BOMBER TYPE 12
On target

The 14-cylinder engine roars like a wounded animal and the whole airframe shakes. There's a red section to the speedometer at over 400km/h, but the needle is wedged all the way to the right. Spent brass clatters from the 7.7 in the rear. The F6F is too fast, he won't be shaken. Where's the Zeroes? The fleet is in view, but only Chikashi can release the bombs. He's gone very quiet. More bullets tear past and the rear gun cuts out. Matsumori knows he's alone. There's a carrier! One touch for the picture on the console, then he grips the yoke in both hands and pushes into a dive. Kit features decals for the 210th Naval Fighter Group.

Only two

Incredibly fast at 469mph and incredibly powerfully armed with a quartet of 30mm cannon, the J7W had the potential to seriously curtail the B-29 raids on the Japanese home islands. However, only two prototypes were ever completed. It took its first flight on August 3rd, 1945, just days before its chief adversary—the B-29—dropped the ultimate checkmate weapons on Hiroshima and Nagasaki. The prototypes never saw combat. One was scrapped, the other brought to the US in crates. Kit features decals for the 302nd Naval Flying Group.

1/24 DAF 3600 SPACE CAB
More space to set the pace

In 1985, the Dutch manufacturer DAF introduced a new truck built on the base of the DAF 3300—the Space Cab. Its cabin was innovative and characterized by high aerodynamic standards. Plus, the new cabin provided a significantly higher level of driver comfort, making it ideal for international commercial freight hauling. An 11.6 liter, 373 horsepower engine delivered power and torque to spare and its fuel consumption rate was, for the time, exceptionally low. All these perks combined to make it one of the most popular DAF trucks of the era! Kit features full decals and detailed parts.

Almost magic

With the TRAM system equipped, the A-6E could locate targets with a turret-mounted FLIR camera and laser designator plus a brand new radar system. In the deadly cat and mouse game that SAM hunting entails, this was the ultimate checkmate move. Radar could locate your target, the laser marks it, the FLIR keeps it on track, and the missiles do the rest. With a target laser-designated, weapons officers could switch off the radar, killing SAM battery's links back to the aircraft. Then. Boom. Kit features two sets of decals for USMC aircraft.

The AH-64A Apache has been unleashing Hellfire missiles and brimstone upon its enemies since 1983. The ability to withstand battle damage while delivering precision strikes against high-priority targets at long range makes it an ideal choice for air forces worldwide. It gets its precision from advanced "Longbow" fire control radar that lets it track 128 and engage 16 targets simultaneously. Whether it's shredding with its 30mm chain gun, or blasting with rockets and missiles, the Apache is a whirlwind of destruction. Kit features five decal versions for the US, UK, Japan, UAE, and the Netherlands.

The Ford Escort Mk.II was launched in 1975. It was a significant improvement over the older model, featuring a squared-style look and high reliability. With three body styles and five engine options, the Mk.II had a substantial variety of models to choose from. Mainly made by Ford plants in Germany, the Mk.II was a sales success. It was released in both the classic version and an aggressively styled, distinctive sport version. For the World Rally Championship, a dedicated RS 1800 version was made. Kit features decals for the Rally Monte Carlo version from the 1979 World Rally Championship.

The car's "Miura" moniker was derived from a type of fighting bull. The bull became so identified with Lamborghini that it became a permanent fixture of the brand's logo. A total of 764 Miura models were produced from 1966-1973. In honor of its importance to the brand, the Miura was briefly resurrected as a concept car in 2006. Kit features a starter kit model with included sprue cutter and downloadable instructions video—perfect for beginners!

With an Opel engine, the front forks of a motorcycle, and a quirky half-tracked rear, the Kettenkrad was an incredibly quirky vehicle with a very militaristic purpose. It was designed to assist Fallschirmjäger (paratrooper) operations by providing a light artillery tractor that could fit on the Ju 52. With few paratrooper operations in the offing, however, the Kettenkrad rolled off production lines and straight into Russia. There, the quick, light vehicle laid cable, hauled supplies, and did its best to haul the Wehrmacht through the mud. Kit features working suspension, opening lids, detailed engine, intricate decal sheet, and highly detailed running tracks and tool set.

Dragon Models 1/72 T-34/85

Now with bigger guns

When Germany rolled into Russia, they ran straight into the T-34—a tank they virtually couldn't kill. By 1942, however, Germany had the Panther and the Tiger and it was Russia which suffered. Until 1944. In 1944, Russia put a larger, 3-man turret armed with an 85mm gun on the chassis of the T-34 and created the T-34/85. One on one, even this tank was disadvantaged against the Tiger. Fortunately, Russians had 5-10 tanks against every one the Germans could field. Get the kit with decals for the 1st Battalion, 63rd Tank Brigade (DMLS0255) or the 38th Independent Tank Regiment (DMLS0256). Kit features detailed, pre-assembled, pre-painted models in diecast and plastic from the Dragon Armor series.

Dragon Models 1/72 Sd.Kfz.181 Tiger I Early Production

Added aggression

The Tiger I is not the type of tank you want to mess with. Against virtually any Allied tank, one-on-one, the Tiger is virtually guaranteed to come out the victor. Shells from opponents like the T-34 and M4 Sherman simply bounce off. Shells from the Tiger to those same opponents... don't. It is very fortunate for the world that Hitler himself ordered the Tiger into combat months before it was really ready. These rushed early tanks, even with their teething problems, still wreaked havoc on Allied formations. Kits feature detailed Early Tiger I models and decals for different units. Kit features detailed, pre-assembled, pre-painted models in diecast and plastic from the Dragon Armor series.

Dragon Models 1/72 Sd.Kfz.184 Elefant

One by one

Testament to the ferocity of the fighting in WWII, this kit has decals for the 653rd Heavy Panzerjäger Battalion. The second and third companies of this battalion were equipped with 30 Elefants each in April, 1944, and had, by August, just twelve vehicles total—80% destroyed in five months. With these twelve, the Wehrmacht formed the 614 Company—an ad-hoc force that struggled to hold back the red tide outside Berlin. Through it all, the Elefant was an exceptionally formidable war machine. Kit features detailed, pre-assembled, pre-painted model in diecast and plastic from the Dragon Armor series.

Dragon Models 1/72 StuG.III Ausf.F StuG.Abt.210

Eastern Front

Terror in its tracks

Storm Artillery Battalion 210 fought on the Eastern Front with Army Group Center for the duration of the Russian campaign. Their StuG.III assault guns did indeed help "kick in the door" of the Soviet Union, but, contrary to Hitler's beliefs, the structure did not come "crashing down". Instead, the 210 would reach the high water mark of the Third Reich just short of Moscow and then participate in successive failed defensive battles against the rising tide of the Red Army. Kit features detailed, pre-assembled, pre-painted models in diecast and plastic from the Dragon Armor series.

60512 DMLS0512

Dragon Models 1/72 Pz.Kpfw.IV Ausf.G 7.Pz.Rgt Totenkopf

Worst of the worst

Make no mistake, these are the bad guys. By any measure, the Totenkopf Division was evil. It was commanded by the original commandant of the Dachau Concentration Camp. It conducted purges on the Eastern Front and executed British POWs in France. Their Panzers were an extension of the will of Adolf Hitler, used to smash Allied lines and blunt counterattacks, or to quell opposition behind the lines. If you're looking for villains for your collection, you've found them. Kit features detailed, pre-assembled, pre-painted models in diecast and plastic from the Dragon Armor series.

Dragon Models 1/72 P-38J Lightning

Pacific buzzsaws

Where most aircraft had guns mounted in the wings and sighted to cross at a pre-set distance, the P-38 was a true straight-shooter. All its armament was clustered right in the nose, and it packed an awesome punch. With four .50 caliber machine guns and a 20mm cannon, the P-38 could chew through just about anything you put in front of it in seconds. America's top aces flew the P-38. Their success, more than any technical description, speaks volumes.

5018 DMLS5018

Dragon Models 1/48 He 162D Volksjager WWII Jet Fighter

Last ditch effort

With the war rapidly coming to its conclusion, the Luftwaffe decided they needed a fighter that was fast to produce, technically superior, and easy to fly. They wanted to put Hitler Youth pilots who had barely completed glider training behind the controls of cutting-edge jet fighters made out of wood. It was crazy... and it very nearly worked. Luckily, it was the last year of the war before these went on duty. Kit features newly tooled swept wings, detailed engines, photo-etched parts, and full decals.
