Fighter Squadron No. 34 faced off against the Soviet forces that had been pressing the borders of Finland since 1939. With an operational strength of just 16 Bf109s, the unit suffered 30 losses but managed to down 345 enemy aircraft. This tally was due in no small part to Ilmari Juutilainen, the top scoring pilot in Finnish aviation and to Hemmo Leino who achieved 11 aerial victories in his career. Saviors of the seas

GPS, sonar, computerized control... it all counts for nothing in the face of the wrath of the Pacific. When all the failsafes fail, the Shinmeiwa is there to save the day. These aircraft are massive quad-prop flying boats that are capable of taking onboard up to twenty stranded mariners or 12 stretchers. Powerful performance

Jaguar is synonymous with performance and performance. That is nowhere more apparent than in the V12 powered XJ-S. This exceptionally long-nosed vehicle had an engine which turned the comparatively small car into nothing less than a rocket on wheels. Plus, in the stylistically starved seventies, it was one of the more exceptionally well modeled cars. A thoroughbred amongst plow horses. Saviors of the seas

The Mitsubishi F-2A may not be the most famous fighter around, but it is certainly one of the most impressive. The F-2 has the distinction of being the first military aircraft equipped with Active Electronically Scanned Array (AESA) radar. Its wing area is also 25 percent larger than other fighters in its class. These advantages make the F-2 a key element of the JASDF units tasked with defending Japan's strategic airspace. 1/24 BMW 2002 TURBO

2 liter turbo

It really doesn't look like much, but beneath the standard 70's euro-car exterior, there's quite the engine. A turbocharged two liter engine delivered 170 horsepower straight to the tires. That much power meant this thing could flat fly. Sadly, practical consideration like fuel consumption, coupled with the 1973 oil crisis limited production of this powerful performer to less than 2,000 vehicles. Kit features new fender, rear seat, wheel, tail light, front grill, and tire parts.

1/24 LAMBORGHINI MIURA P400 SV

Envy of everyone

Designed virtually in secret by Lamborghini engineers, the Miura was the perfect blend of on-road car and racecar. Its exquisite lines, great handling, and powerful V-12 engine put the competition to shame. There was simply nothing else to match it on the market in the seventies. Adding to its mystique is the rarity of the type—less than a thousand were built with only 150 of the P400 SV built. This limited edition kit features special markings for chassis number 5030.

Taking on the world

Designed, essentially, as an enlarged destroyer. Tatsuta carried four 14cm guns, and a continuously fluctuating anti-aircraft armament. Tatsuta was used primarily as a transport and escort vessel during WWII. She ran supplies and men to the contested Islands of the Pacific and sometimes brought back the shattered remnants of those forces when they were expelled. She was eventually sunk by Sand Lance—an American submarine—on March 13, 1944. Kit features photoetched parts, full hull, rudder, screw, and display stand plus two sets of decals.

Currently, they only operate rotary wing aircraft or tilt rotors. Hyuga herself, commissioned in 2009, hasn't seen any combat but did help with disaster relief after the 2011 earthquake in Japan and has been used to help keep a close eye on North Korea's nuke program. Kit features detailed parts and full decals for DDH-181.

Eyes over the Eastern Front

If you're going to execute a war across the vast spaces of the Russian Steppe, you'd best have a way of reconnoitering a wide area. Russian forces could be everywhere... or nowhere. The "Uhu" gave German commanders the eyes in the sky they needed to find the enemy and the way forward. It was an exceptionally interesting aircraft just in appearance—twin boom, twin engine, and with a greenhouse-style gondola for a three man crew. Battlefield behemoth

Germany's answer to losing tanks—build bigger tanks. The Tiger II or "King Tiger" weighed in at over seventy tons, had armor up to seven inches thick, and wielded an 88mm gun and a pair of MG34s. One on one and from the front, the most common Allied tanks didn't have a prayer. Fortunately for the Allies, the Tiger II was mechanically unreliable. Large numbers of tanks would break down, especially early in the type's deployment, before they reached the lines. Kit features photo-etched parts, tank driver, and four sets of decals.

1/48 SBD-5 DAUNTLESS

Slow but deadly

If results are a measure of quality, then the Dauntless dive bomber was the best aircraft of the Pacific War. Their shining moment came at the Battle of Midway where their bombs ripped holes in flight decks and aircraft elevators, detonated bombs and lit av-gas fires, destroyed rudder controls, and resulted in the destruction of four virtually irreplaceable carriers—two thirds of the total Japanese fleet carriers. The Dauntless went on to be replaced, but the hammer blow was already delivered. IJN forces never recovered. Kit features five sets of decals.

1/35 CARRO ARMATO L6/40 TANK

For the glory of Rome

The L6/40 was an exceptional light tank—great for scouting, knocking out thin-skinned vehicles, and routing infantry in the open. That was what it was designed for. As soon as the light tanks of other armies ran into other tanks, entrenched infantry, or anti-tank guns, they could call up medium tanks. The L6/40 couldn't, because there simply weren't many to call. Facing any sort of anti-tank weapon, the thin-skinned L6/40 suffered badly. Kit features photo etched parts, figure, and five sets of decals.
